

THE EXIT PLANNING REVIEW™

Issue 279

April 15, 2014

The Necessary Beast: Due Diligence

No experienced buyer purchases a company without first learning everything there is to know about it. That learning process is known as “due diligence.”

During due diligence, a buyer, its accountant(s), lawyer(s) and any other professional advisor it employs will examine every aspect of every one of the seller’s contracts, procedures, relationships, plans, agreements, systems, leases, manuals and financial documents.

This process requires an extraordinary amount of time and attention on both the buyer’s and the seller’s parts. That’s why we recommend that owners initiate the due diligence process as soon as they decide to sell their companies and have an indication from a transaction intermediary that the business is salable for sufficient money to meet their financial security wishes and needs.

Starting the due diligence process well before the buyer requests documents gives sellers the opportunity to remove any obstacle that might prevent a buyer from traveling a straight path to closing. Keeping the road to closing free from unnecessary impediments compresses the time between the buyer’s offer and the closing. In a sales transaction, time rarely favors the seller so owners want to condense the process.

Buyers are looking for the skeletons in your closet and are very skilled at finding them. They are looking for malfeasance or undisclosed material risks. They will look for fraud (on the part of an owner or manager) or any misrepresentations you have made such as improperly recognized revenues or expenses, and any information you have omitted, such as: unpaid taxes, pending or threatened litigation or obsolescent business equipment, processes, products or services.

The buyer is also looking for information that would affect the value of the company and the advisability of purchasing it. Up to the moment due diligence begins, you have controlled the information flowing to the buyer. You give up much of that control during the buyer’s due diligence.

Finally, if the buyer’s search for malfeasance, misrepresentations or information that would affect the company’s value yields no results, the hunt is on for anything that the buyer could use to lower the price or improve its terms. And that ulterior motive—lowering price and improving the buyer’s terms—permeates the entire due diligence process. Is it any wonder that sellers hate (and that is not too strong a word) this process?

And, is it any wonder that we strongly suggest (as we do) that you and your advisors clean up every contract, agreement, stock book, record of corporate actions, manual, lease, or threatened law suit BEFORE you take your company to market?

If you have any questions about the extent or value of the due diligence process, please contact us. We’d be happy to help you get started.

Subsequent issues of The Exit Planning Review™ provide balanced and advertising-free information about all aspects of Exit Planning. We have newsletter articles and detailed White Papers related to this and other Exit

This issue brought to you by:

Clarke Langrall, CEPA
Forecast Strategic Advisors
clarke@forecastadvisors.com
<http://www.forecastadvisors.com>

◆
We are involved in a National Survey of Business Owners to learn about what they are doing to plan for the transition out from their business. Please take a moment to be a part of the program.

Thank you.

Your results will be kept anonymous. Please click the link below to take the Survey:

<http://www.esurveyspro.com/s/256160/beibusinessownersurvey>

◆
The Exit Planning Review™
is published by Business Enterprise Institute, Inc.
◆

Planning topics. If you have any questions or want additional Exit Planning information, please contact us.

© Copyright 2014 Business Enterprise Institute, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Copyright © 2003-2014. All rights reserved.